There are now few left of either band of that no-quarter organization, one side of which was captained by Jennison, Lane and Ransom of Kansas and Penick of Missouri, the other led by Quantrell Anderson the other led by Quantrell, Anderson, the Younger brothers and the James boys. All but one of the list that abused the blue are dead. Three of the latter that rode in any uniform, but which were Confederate at heart always, are hving. a free man. During the summer of this year I During the summer of this year I was in the house of a man who threw off his pistols and belt only after he had rode out of his own country into another, where he offered to take up the cause of an Austrian prince. That renewed his Americanbood. He said to me the night in which we talked over the events, some of which I am about to give you: "It's good medicine for an American who has had a grudge ngainst his own country, this lighting for a foreigner."

I am anxious to put this man at once well up in the estimation of the readers, and I will be pardened for the state-ment here that he is an old type, and for more than twenty-four years he has worked at his case, in one office, never employing a "sub," except when sickness demanded it.

One of Quantrell's men had gone off on an expedition under Quantrell's order and was cut off. He went into ambush until hunger drove him out. When he until hunger drove him out. When he lifted his head above the prairie grass he looked into seventy-two jayhawkers' guns. One of the orders of every guerrilla was to stand and die when outnumbered. He knew how many bullets he had, and that his time had come. He opened the battle, and five jayhawkers reeled out of their saddles. The other sixty savage charged and the guerrilla. other sixty-seven charged and the guer-rilla gave up. They scalped him and took off his ears. He had eleven balls in his body, any one of which would have done the work. That was the first scalping done by white men during the war. We found his body the next the war. We found his body the next day and buried it. No vultures ever feasted on a dead guerrilla. We took an and not one of them had time to try and find God. One guerrilla alone scalped four jayhawkers. From that hour the order was extermination.

Fra Diavolo, in the Appendix

Fra Diavolo, in the Apentnes, was thought to be the incarnation of desperation. Strangely enough, it has been woven into song. El Empecinado was woven into song. El Empechado was the merciless creation of the Junta of Spain, but he was a messenger of peace compared with the guerrilla who wrote yae victis on his black flag under which

The pillaged, burned and slew.

The implacebility of the guerrilla was based on no funcied wrong. Quantrell was a bold fighter from the start, but he pretended to have a principle at stake, until his favorite brother, an instage, until his favorite ordiner, as inflocent boy, who was his mother's favorite, was killed in a attack upon the flome by thirty-two men, who claimed they did it in defense of their country.
Quantrell organized eight men and swore to avenge his brother's death. The awful outh was kept, until every man swore to avenge his broiner's detail. The myful oath was kept, until every man who had made the attack on his home had paid the penalty save two. It was at this stage of the game that he met told the story of his bereavement and retold the story of ms bereavement and to-yenge, and they became his followers. The story met with a response from these two boys. They were farm lads when the shot was fired at Sunter. In the first year there was more bitterness the border than at any time there-

Hatreds and comities engendered before the struggle were settled in the name of the flag, just as the crimes were committed in the French revolution. These James boys had a stepfather, I.F. Samuels, who had some enemies. They put on blue uniforms and hung him to a tree, where he was left for dead. They went into the field where Jesse was plowing and took him into for dead. They went into the field where Jesse was plowing and took him into the woods and slashed his body with falters. Returning to the homestead near by, a house which later became a shelter for the slek and weary guerrilla, they made prisoners of the mother and her daughters and sent them to St. Joseph, Mo., and put them into a prison that was recking with vermin. When the women became a care to the prison keeper he released them. When they returned to the homestead the two boys were gone. They had joined Quantrell. Frank was is years old, Jesse was 16. That was the beginning of their career in avengement and rapine, arson, killing, and later on train robbing. It is not difficult to understand why they listened to Quantrell, nor why they follistened to Quantrell, nor why they fol-

He crossed into Missouri, and was a good soldier under the leadership of Price, who was a man of probity as well as courage, and who was idolized by the Southern sympathizers of Missouri. Courage, and who was idolized by the Southern sympathizers of Missouri, Quantrell was with Price at Lexington, and followed him in his retreat to the Osage. He had also been at Carthage and Wilson's creek. Price said he was the bandsomest man he ever saw in the saddle. When the idol of the Missouri Confederates reached the border of Arkansas every man's time had expired. That is, every man was at liberty to go on and enlist in the trans-Mississippi department or turn back. Un to that time not one of Price's soldiery owed an allegiance to the Confederacy of Davis.

From the Chicago Chronicle.

What was known as the guerrilla warfare on the border was more exacting than the Mostane law. The former's banner was a black flag and the motto, carried out to the letter, was "A scaip for a scaip." Long after the conceiling tion and the klas of peace between the Blue and the Gray, more than a quarter of a century ano, it was considered unself on the Missouri-Kansas border for the survivor, guerrilla or jaybawker, to even forgive the dead that had been the woman from her place of danger and there was a fight. It was unequal, but attempted to escape. She was to lead

He was an eid politician and a man who had given council in aid of the Confederacy. He was the father of fourteen children and the owner of a stock farm in Cass county. Mo. He was driven from his home, his horses were taken and his farm devastated. That was war. Coleman Younger could not object to that. The old man, chased to Kansas City, undertook later to return to his home. He had been told to stay away. He was underrook later to return to his home. He had been told to stay away. He was killed on the graise and his body turned into the grass, where it was found by Coleman Younger and his brothers James and Bob. The sons knelt by the lifeless form and with clasped hands over it they swore to avenge his death. While they were taking the oath the jay hawkers were plying the torch to the Younger home. The mother of these boys, deprived of necessities, and brokenshearted, died of consumption a little while after. Before she closed her eyes for the last time her youngest boy was taken from her side, hung up and left for dead. That was war on the border. The incident intensified it and prolonged it.

The first signature to this challenge was Coleman Younger. The Jayhawker laughed and sent the message back. The next day the Jayhawker removed the woman from her place of danage and there was a fight. It was unequal, but both sides quit satisfied and rode away in opposite directions.

Independence, Mo., continued to be a base of opporations for the jayhawkers, it was always necessary for the giverrilla to know the situation there. An old woman rode into the town with a beaket of garden truck on her saddle and went trafficking among the soldiers. She sold out her stock and mounted to resurn. As she was riling out a Jayhawker called her back. That was suspicious. The old woman pulled up her dress, drew a pistol from her bootleg, sind and killed the Jayhawker, and put spirits to her horse. Dr. C. A. Newcomb, of the city dispensary, has acquired quite a reputation as one of the promising members of the younger generation of the profession. A woman took a fall out of him one day last week. She has an opinion he don't know how to doctor a little hit, and she had no hesitancy in telling him so.

The woman's child had a severe attack of croup, and Dr. Newcomb prescribed an emetic. Next day she called on him with fire in her eyes and scorn on her lips.
